Star Portraits takes on a mentalist

ALEX STRACHAN
Canwest News Service

You already know about Twilight, The Rocky Horror Picture Show and Dr. Jekyll & Mr. Hyde. If you have young 'uns, you already know about It's the Great Pumpkin, Charlie Brown and Wallace & Gromit: Curse of the Were-Rabbit.

If you're looking for something a little more unusual and artsy this Halloween, consider Star Portraits, Bravo's absorbing, often revealing celebration of famous Canadian faces as painted by contemporary portrait artists.

Tonight's subject is George Joseph Kreskin Jr., a.k.a. The Amazing Kreskin, a real-life mentalist — and noted debunker of psychic mediums — who was inspired to become an illusionist after being enchanted by Lee Falk's Mandrake the Magician comic strip as a child.

For the past several weeks, Star Portraits has challenged three Canadian painters — a different trio each week — to paint the same celebrity's portrait. The painters meet their subject, kibitz about everything from the weather to the Leafs to draw out their subject's personality and are then given two weeks to create a portrait in oils.

Elvis Stojko, Measha Brueggergosman, Enrico Colantoni, George Chuvalo, Margaret Trudeau and Romeo Dallaire were among the early subjects; future Star Portraits will focus on Ashley MacIsaac, Colin Mochrie, Roberta Bondar and, next week, Alex Trebek.

Tonight is Halloween, though, and Kreskin is an inspired choice. Star Portraits' host, Broadway performer Louise Pitre, challenges artists Catto Houghton, Stefan Galvanek and Marie Finkelstein to "get at the essence of our enigmatic guest."

The public Kreskin is well known: his TV show, The Amazing World of Kreskin, was produced out of Ottawa's CJOH-TV in the early '70s, and would be lampooned by everyone from Johnny Carson to the SCTV comedy troupe.

The private Kreskin is harder to get a handle on. There's a delightful moment early on when Galvanek insists that Kreskin sit still, only to have Kreskin quip, "It is literally impossible for me to sit still because I'm a mobile person."

Kreskin has thought his entire life in terms of paintings, he reveals, as if "I'm painting the person I'm in the room with."

He's a demanding subject, in other words, and Galvanek, Finkelstein and Houghton have their hands full. "What is the difference between a psychic and a mentalist?" Pitre asks Kreskin at one point.

That's the question, isn't it? A psychic can predict the outcome of tonight's Leafs-Habs game. A mentalist can tell you what's going to go wrong, and why. No crystal ball required. (Bravo — 6 p.m.)

Meet the Mounties without the funny hats and horses

SHERI LEVINE
Canwest News Service

The men and women in red; Mounties with funny hats; Musical Ride — just a few things commonly associated with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. But Canadians are about to get to know the RCMP beyond the uniforms, hats and horses in the television documentary series Courage in Red.

The 13-part series, premiering Sunday on outdoor Life Network (8 p.m. MT), is an unprecedented look at how these officers in red operate, what they're doing to keep Canadians safe and the dangers they face every day.

"It was a huge journey of discovery for myself and my team," executive producer Colin McKeown says. "I didn't realize how many jobs they had. The breadth of their missions is quite huge. It's staggering what they do."

Each episode of Courage in Red focuses on a different aspect of the RCMP. Topics include the training involved in protecting foreign dignitaries visiting Canada, international peacekeeping missions, emergency response teams and the handling of meth and ecstasy labs.

This is the first time the RCMP has allowed such exclusive access. McKeown, who has security classification from his days in the Navy, says his opportunity came out of a combination of good timing and the credibility he earned from his documentary series Truth Duty Valour, which looked at Canada's military and had been viewed by several members of the RCMP. In the end, the Mounties got their man and, in return, allowed McKeown to showcase the RCMP without any spin or negative connotations.

As McKeown explains, the RCMP has realized the importance of being less mysterious to the public.

"The RCMP is evolving in a very positive way and realizes it needs to communicate (more) with Canadians and let them know how it's protecting them," he says. "Five years ago they didn't want to do that because they felt that would be a breach of security and they're a more secretive culture. Whereas today, they want to get that message out."

McKeown adds that it just seemed like an appropriate time to make such a series.
